

Indianapolis Liederkrantz

During the 1800's, the German immigrants wanted to preserve their culture in their new country. Many of them formed societies based on common interests. Some of these interests included singing. In 1872, the Indianapolis Liederkrantz was formed. "Liederkrantz" means "singing society". The club was dedicated to four-part male harmony, so the choir was only for the men. Now over one hundred thirty-five years later, it is still going strong. In 1997, a women's choir (Damenchor) was added. Both choirs are directed by Loesje Chandler, and they rehearse every Wednesday evening from September through May. Each choir hosts a spring and fall concert. In addition, there is a combined Christmas concert, and there are several dances during the year. Many of these events are open to the public.
